Organizational Description

The Center for the Development of Recycling (CDR) is a university-based non-profit organization that provides recycling and materials management information to residents and businesses in Santa Clara and San Mateo Counties. CDR is contracted with local government to operate the official recycling website, call center (recycling hotline), and Household Hazardous Waste appointment center for Santa Clara County and the recycling website for San Mateo County. The Recycling Hotline and Household Hazardous Waste Appointment Center is open from 9:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. Hotline information is always available at www.RecycleStuff.org.

As part of San Jose State University's (SJSU) Department of Environmental Studies and the SJSU Research Foundation (SJSURF) faculty-managed service-learning students operate the hotline, conduct research, and develop the information resources found on RecycleStuff.org. The collaboration between Santa Clara and San Mateo County, the cities within them, and SJSU and SJSURF provide residents and businesses with cost-efficient recycling and materials management information service while students obtain valuable learning experiences. Students earn academic credit while they gain valuable public service experience, and project management and information skills that prepare them for environmental careers, particularly in the field of materials management.
